FIFTY-SECOND YEAR. NUMBER 143 — CIRCLEVILLE, OHIO, MONDAY, JUNE 17, 1935 — THREE CENTS

The DAILY WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT S. ALLEN

FDR Had Narrow Squeak in Winning Senate Fight for Holding Company Bill

WASHINGTON—The story of the behind-the-scenes maneuvering which put across the Holding Corporation Bill in the Senate is one of the most amazing and significant in the annals of the New Deal.

Its significance lies in the fact that even on a bill which was known as the President's pet, a large section of his own Party deserted him. It took the independent Republicans to put the bill across. This condition will intensify as time goes on.

The amazing part of the hidden struggle was that James Aloysius Farley—anything but a radical—and his chief henchman, hefty Emil Hurja, came in at the last moment to put the bill across.

The complete story includes that of one of the most powerful and effective lobbies seen in Washington since the public utilities rallied their forces against Senator Tom Walsh's Power Trust investigation in 1927.

Dinner parties, stag get-togethers, high-pressure sales talk, all were used by the utility moguls to bring in votes. One Senator's apartment was the scene of almost nightly mint julep soirees where certain Senators were brought in to meet the barons of big business.

Ex-Enemies

Most active of the lobbyists were two strange bedfellows: Joseph P. Tumulty, one-time secretary for the great reformer, Woodrow Wilson, who has now built up a thriving law practice in the Capital.

George Moses, arch-Republican ex-Senator from New Hampshire. Once ardent political enemies, they became allies.

Aiding them behind the scenes was Harvey Couch, one-time member of the RFC, heavy campaign contributor to Senator Joe Robinson, and powerful utility magnate in Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana. Couch centered his attention on Pat Harrison and Joe Robinson, chief Democratic leaders.

Delay

The strategy of the opposition was delay. The longer they could stall off a vote, the more votes they thought they could gain. Therefore, on the day before the final vote, Harrison, who was secretly opposed to the bill (though lining up with the President on a final show-down), attempted to sidetrack it. He proposed bringing up the NRA resolution instead. This would have meant another week's wait, probable defeat.

At this point Tom Corcoran, Roosevelt's private operator for the bill, telephoned him in Hyde Park. Delay, he warned, was fatal. Roosevelt in turn telephoned his Senate leaders and they bowed before his command.

That night the utility lobby launched its mightiest offensive—social and otherwise. Next morning when the Senate convened, barrel-breasted Senator Dieterich, floor-manager of the opposition, sat at his desk supremely confident. He had made a secret poll which netted him 47 votes in favor of his amendment. This was aimed to take the heart out of the bill.

Even staunch supporters of the President, such as Byrnes of South Carolina, Clark of Missouri and Radcliffe of Maryland, Roosevelt's former employer, had deserted him.

It was at this point—in response to another call from Hyde Park—that Big Jim Farley and Emil Hurja got busy. While Dieterich lolled unsuspectingly in his seat, they snatched three votes—Adams of Colorado, Guffey of

SENATOR ROBERT F. WAGNER

WASHINGTON, June 17—Other senators may talk more but Senator Robert Ferdinand Wagner, Democrat, of New York has his name on more provocative measures than any other U. S. senator this session.

Society's Purpose

"Out of the wreckage of this depression America must build happiness for the masses.

"Unemployment, insecurity in old age, slums, unfair practices toward the toilers who produce our wealth—they are problems which must be attacked by public citizens, those in authority and the rising generation."

Bob Wagner dedicated his life to their solution long ago. He has been championing measures for their solution ever since. And he has a monumental record of achievement behind him.

The wave of social security legislation sweeping through congress is the fruition of Wagner's dreams. His had been a "voice in the wilderness" for a third of a century, according to the groups that support him.

Boys Suffocate In Dad's Ice Box

Brooklyn Father Finds Youths Dead; Tore Clothing Off Seeking Air; Ages of Tragedy Victims, 7, 5 and 3.

NEW YORK, June 17—The bodies of George Hoyt's three children lay in their Brooklyn home today, destined for graves in Potter's field unless something, or someone, intervenes.

For Hoyt, still stunned by the tragedy which snuffed out the lives of his sons, George, Jr., 7, Eugene, 5, and Arnold, 3, was without funds to bury them.

The tragedy was all so sudden. Hoyt had been on relief until a sudden windfall—a small prize in a lottery—gave him new hope. He bought an old moving van, believing he could make enough on odd jobs to keep his family.

He made only $2 last week, but on Saturday had hopes of selling a big old-fashioned icebox he had picked up during the week. He drove to see a prospective customer. No luck. When he returned home he found his boys were missing.

Frantically he drove his van through the streets in search for them. He notified police. The boys were still unlocated late at night when he suddenly thought of the icebox in the truck—the boys had been playing around it in the morning.

Fearfully he groped through the darkness and opened the refrigerator door. His screams brought police. The bodies were there, their clothing partially torn off from their desperate battle for breath in the airtight compartment. The boys had crawled into the box and were too small to know they were sealing their doom when they closed the heavy door behind them.

O'NEIL TAKES REINS OF NRA

New Yorker to Adjust Organization; Reduction In Personnel Necessary.

WASHINGTON, June 17—Adjustment of the NRA and its personnel to the work to be done during the coming months was the program announced today by James L. O'Neill, New York banker, who took over the reins of the reconstructed recovery unit.

"The next few weeks," O'Neill said, "will be devoted to developing plans for the adjustment of the organization and its personnel. Announcements will be made as soon as possible concerning appropriate changes in personnel.

"Pending this adjustment and in order to afford an opportunity for orderly procedure, I am now adopting and confirming the action of the recovery board in continuing our personnel in their present positions on a temporary basis, until further ordered."

"Gradual reduction of personnel" of the "little NRA" was the "bad news" the 5,000 NRA workers received from the White House today.

The duties and responsibilities of the organization will dwindle to a mere shadow, unless congress enacts further measures to give the federal government control over industry and commerce.

Unless the new act, written to conform with the recent decision of the supreme court, the organization is little more than a "ballyhoo outfit."

Boys Suffocate In Dad's Ice Box

Brooklyn Father Finds Youths Dead; Tore Clothing Off Seeking Air; Ages of Tragedy Victims, 7, 5 and 3.

NEW YORK, June 17—The bodies of George Hoyt's three children lay in their Brooklyn home today, destined for graves in Potter's field unless something, or someone, intervenes.

For Hoyt, still stunned by the tragedy which snuffed out the lives of his sons, George, Jr., 7, Eugene, 5, and Arnold, 3, was without funds to bury them.

The tragedy was all so sudden. Hoyt had been on relief until a sudden windfall—a small prize in a lottery—gave him new hope. He bought an old moving van, believing he could make enough on odd jobs to keep his family.

He made only $2 last week, but on Saturday had hopes of selling a big old-fashioned icebox he had picked up during the week. He drove to see a prospective customer. No luck. When he returned home he found his boys were missing.

Frantically he drove his van through the streets in search for them. He notified police. The boys were still unlocated late at night when he suddenly thought of the icebox in the truck—the boys had been playing around it in the morning.

Fearfully he groped through the darkness and opened the refrigerator door. His screams brought police. The bodies were there, their clothing partially torn off from their desperate battle for breath in the airtight compartment. The boys had crawled into the box and were too small to know they were sealing their doom when they closed the heavy door behind them.

The "Young Turks" are out to get Huey, and make no bones about it.

O'NEIL TAKES REINS OF NRA

New Yorker to Adjust Organization; Reduction In Personnel Necessary.

WASHINGTON, June 17—Adjustment of the NRA and its personnel to the work to be done during the coming months was the program announced today by James L. O'Neill, New York banker, who took over the reins of the reconstructed recovery unit.

"The next few weeks," O'Neill said, "will be devoted to developing plans for the adjustment of the organization and its personnel. Announcements will be made as soon as possible concerning appropriate changes in personnel.

"Pending this adjustment and in order to afford an opportunity for orderly procedure, I am now adopting and confirming the action of the recovery board in continuing our personnel in their present positions on a temporary basis, until further ordered."

"Gradual reduction of personnel" of the "little NRA" was the "bad news" the 5,000 NRA workers received from the White House today.

The duties and responsibilities of the organization will dwindle to a mere shadow, unless congress enacts further measures to give the federal government control over industry and commerce.

Unless the new act, written to conform with the recent decision of the supreme court, the organization is little more than a "ballyhoo outfit."

been sustained by the government would far exceed in value the amount involved in the Teapot Dome oil scandal."

Commerce department officials, admitting Mitchell had previously alleged "serious derelections" in several departments, scoffed at his allegations, pointed out that Secretary Roper had invited the assistant secretary to present his evidence to Attorney General Cummings for possible prosecution and declared they welcomed a full investigation.

Await Reaction

Meanwhile they attuned their ears to capitol hill for congressional reaction.

Mitchell charged in a letter to President Roosevelt May 30:

1—That Secretary of Commerce Roper has "suddenly surrendered to the special interests that have dominated this department and the old shipping board under the Hoover and previous administrations."

2—That grave abuses with possibility of scandal seriously reflecting upon the Roosevelt administration" have been permitted in the shipping board bureau of the department.

3—That the steamboat inspection service, bureau of lighthouses and coast and geodetic survey are "suffering from extravagance, waste and dry-rot."

4—That inefficient inspection by the steamboat inspection service "probably contributed to the Morro Castle disaster" in which scores of lives were lost.

5—That U. S. Senator Bronson Cutting and four others killed recently in a Missouri plane crash might be alive today "if one with knowledge, experience and stability suited to the position had been in charge of the bureau of air commerce."

6—That the atmosphere of the department has been to "whitewash and cover-up the delinquencies of the past and to accede to every demand made by the high-pressure lobbyists and representatives of selfish interests."

Since Mitchell' office was purely administrative he was liable to dismissal by the President without appeal. The recent Supreme court decision, holding the President exceeded his power in dismissing William Humphreys, late federal trade commissioner, does not apply.

Gerry vs. Dowling

Eddie Dowling, famous stage star, one-time candidate for Senator from Rhode Island against Peter Gerry, and producer of the Broadway show, "Thumbs Up," has a brother who is a United States marshal in Rhode Island. While Eddie's show was running in New York, his brother came to see it.

"Gee, Eddie," he said after the spectacle was over, "that must have cost you a lot."

"About $175,000," replied the elder Dowling.

"Well, no wonder you withdrew and let Gerry have the Senatorship," remarked his brother.

"What do you mean."

"Why, don't you know? Everyone in Rhode Island says that the only reason you got out and let Peter Gerry have it was because he put up all the money for your show."

Note:—Eddie had his financial backers, but Senator Gerry was not one of them.

Texas Blast

Senator "Long Tom" Connally of Texas believes in going to bat for those who bat for him.

Arthur C. Perry, who batted for him twelve years as secretary, recently was up before Civil Service for appointment to the Federal Communications Commission. Perry had an excellent record but was short on legal experience. So Senator Connally went before the Commission to help him out.

In the middle of the Senator's statement, one commissioner called attention to the requirement of six years legal experience which Perry did not have.

"Sir," snorted Long Tom, "this is my testimony. I do not like the tone of your questions. More than that, I do not like your face."

Whereupon the meeting adjourned.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1935 C. M. Co.

U. S. IS AFTER MAHAN ALIVE; MONEY HIDDEN

Hoover Gives Federal Men Orders to Take Weyerhauser Fugitive Alive.

TACOMA, Wash., June 17—"Bring him in alive."

That is the G-men's order in the widespread hunt for William Mahan, alias the "egoist," fugitive member of the Weyerhaeuser kidnap gang, it was learned today.

Mahan, listed as U. S. Public Enemy No. 1, is wanted alive by John Edgar Hoover, director of the federal bureau of investigation, the same man who issued orders of "bring them in dead or alive," in the spectacular searches for John Dillinger, "Baby Face" Nelson and other erstwhile U. S. public enemies.

$85,000 Missing

Hoover doesn't want Mahan shot and killed on account of the missing $85,000 of the $200,000 ransom money paid by J. P. Weyerhaeuser to the "egoist" mob.

Should Mahan be killed in a battle with officers, Weyerhaeuser will have practically no hope of ever regaining his $85,000. Only Mahan, now a lone wolf, knows where the money is hidden.

G-men have recovered $115,000 of the ransom, minus a few hundred dollars spent or burned by Harmon Metz Waley, the 24-year-old ex-convict, and his pretty wife Margaret, 19, in their futile flight from Tacoma to Salt Lake City.

A new hunt for Mahan was being made in the Seattle underworld and in the wooded hills of the Cascades north of here following word from Butte that officers there believed he had eluded traps set for him in the historic mining town of Montana.

Back in Seattle

Mahan, a crafty outlaw, with a record extending over fifteen years usually re-traced his steps to Seattle in past crimes, police officials said.

Word from Olympia, Wash., where the Waleys are being held pending trial in federal court here, disclosed that Mrs. Waley was in a "delicate condition." This led to a report she is about to become a mother.

TOWN TO TURN SEWAGE FROM WALNUT CREEK

Ashville's Superintendent Is Checking on Project; Other News From Village.

ASHVILLE, June 17.—The village's sanitary sewage has been turned into the disposal tank and the line seems to be functioning nicely. Superintendent of Sewage Ward will be a very busy man for a time checking up on the different properties to see that the refusal is going where intended.

Once these connections are properly made there will be no more sewage diverted into Walnut creek as has been the practice for many years.

Clearing Streets

Street Commissioner Reuben Weber is working overtime trying to get the village's streets into condition for the Fourth of July celebration.

Several streets have been rolled down while the trenches in the streets and alleys are being graded and put in a passable condition. This job was taken over from the contractors and is being done with local labor.

Pea Pack Resumes

The pea pack at the Crites factory which started apparently prematurely last week as the pack was not quite ready was resumed this week with quite a few peas being delivered. The women are now employed in two shifts, day and night.

The yield promises to be large and the quality is good.

Mrs. Anna Ball of Walnut-twp is seriously ill at her home.

Peters Inspects Job

Richard "Dick" Peters, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Peters of E. Main-st is engineer inspector on a waterworks project in Pataskala, Licking-co. He is in the employ of Burgess and Niple, the Columbus consulting engineers who have charge of Ashville's PWA projects.

Mr. Peters was employed on the local sewer contract.

been sustained by the government would far exceed in value the amount involved in the Teapot Dome oil scandal."

Commerce department officials, admitting Mitchell had previously alleged "serious derelections" in several departments, scoffed at his allegations, pointed out that Secretary Roper had invited the assistant secretary to present his evidence to Attorney General Cummings for possible prosecution and declared they welcomed a full investigation.

Await Reaction

Meanwhile they attuned their ears to capitol hill for congressional reaction.

Mitchell charged in a letter to President Roosevelt May 30:

1—That Secretary of Commerce Roper has " suddenly surrendered to the special interests that have dominated this department and the old shipping board under the Hoover and previous administrations."

2. That grave abuses with pssibility of scandal seriously reflecting upon the Roosevelt administration" have been permitted in the shipping board bureau of the department.

3—That the steamboat inspection service, bureau of lighthouses and coast and geodetic survey are "suffering from extravagance, waste and dry-rot."

4—That inefficient inspection by the steamboat inspection service "probably contributed to the Morro Castle disaster" in which scores of lives were lost.

5—That U. S. Senator Bronson Cutting and four others killed recently in a Missouri plane crash might be alive today "if one with knowledge, experience and stability suited to the position had been in charge of the bureau of air commerce."

6—That the atmosphere of the department has been to "whitewash and cover-up the delinquencies of the past and to accede to every demand made by the high-pressure lobbyists and representatives of selfish interests."

Since Mitchell' office was purely administrative he was liable to dismissal by the President without appeal. The recent Supreme court decision, holding the President exceeded his power in dismissing William Humphreys, late federal trade commissioner, does not apply.

Gerry vs. Dowling

Eddie Dowling, famous stage star, one-time candidate for Senator from Rhode Island against Peter Gerry, and producer of the Broadway show, "Thumbs Up," has a brother who is a United States marshal in Rhode Island. While Eddie's show was running in New York, his brother came to see it.

"Gee, Eddie," he said after the spectacle was over, "that must have cost you a lot."

"About $175,000," replied the elder Dowling.

"Well, no wonder you withdrew and let Gerry have the Senatorship," remarked his brother.

"What do you mean."

"Why, don't you know? Everyone in Rhode Island says that the only reason you got out and let Peter Gerry have it was because he put up all the money for your show."

Note:—Eddie had his financial backers, but Senator Gerry was not one of them.

Texas Blast

Senator "Long Tom" Connally of Texas believes in going to bat for those who bat for him.

Arthur C. Perry, who batted for him twelve years as secretary, recently was up before Civil Service for appointment to the Federal Communications Commission. Perry had an excellent record but was short on legal experience. So Senator Connally went before the Commission to help him out.

In the middle of the Senator's statement, one commissioner called attention to the requirement of six years legal experience which Perry did not have.

"Sir," snorted Long Tom, "this is my testimony. I do not like the tone of your questions. More than that, I do not like your face."

Whereupon the meeting adjourned.

Note: The Commission stuck by its guns.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your headaches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1981 C. M. Co.

U. S. IS AFTER MAHAN ALIVE; MONEY HIDDEN

Hoover Gives Federal Men Orders to Take Weyerhauser Fugitive Alive.

TACOMA, Wash., June 17—"Bring him in alive."

That is the G-men's order in the widespread hunt for William Mahan, alias the "egoist," fugitive member of the Weyerhaeuser kidnap gang, it was learned today.

Mahan, listed as U. S. Public Enemy No. 1, is wanted alive by John Edgar Hoover, director of the federal bureau of investigation, the same man who issued orders of "bring them in dead or alive," in the spectacular searches for John Dillinger, "Baby Face" Nelson and other erstwhile U. S. public enemies.

$85,000 Missing

Hoover doesn't want Mahan shot and killed on account of the missing $85,000 of the $200,000 ransom money paid by J. P. Weyerhaeuser to the "egoist" mob.

Should Mahan be killed in a battle with officers, Weyerhaeuser will have practically no hope of ever regaining his $85,000. Only Mahan, now a lone wolf, knows where the money is hidden.

G-men have recovered $115,000 of the ransom, minus a few hundred dollars spent or burned by Harmon Metz Waley, the 24-year-old ex-convict, and his pretty wife Margaret, 19, in their futile flight from Tacoma to Salt Lake City.

A new hunt for Mahan was being made in the Seattle underworld and in the wooded hills of the Cascades north of here following word from Butte that officers there believed he had eluded traps set for him in the historic mining town of Montana.

Back in Seattle

Mahan, a crafty outlaw, with a record extending over fifteen years usually re-traced his steps to Seattle in past crimes, police officials said.

Word from Olympia, Wash., where the Waleys are being held pending trial in federal court here, disclosed that Mrs. Waley was in a "delicate condition." This led to a report she is about to become a mother.

Wife Preservers

If your boys have high top shoes and the tongues are always slipping and sliding, take heavy black thread and make a half-inch loop at the top of the tongue, buttonholing it. Lace the shoe laces through it and tie as usual. This keeps the shoe tongue always in place.

NATURE UNLEASHED

FLOODS succeeding drought in the corn country may cause wonder at the extremes of capricious nature, but there is close correlation between the dust storms denuding farms of topsoil and raging rivers which submerge whole communities. Both are, in their cataclysmic effects, the direct result of man's interference with natural balances.

Miles upon square miles of farmlands were once covered with tough turf, rank prairie vegetation and forests. When the months passed without rain this growth conserved the moisture in the ground and anchored the topsoil to the terrain. When rain fell, the matted shrubs and grasses sponged up the waters. Then came a generation of plowmen who ripped up the turf, powdered the soil and in search of wealth prepared for disaster. Hot, dry winds whirl up the plowed soil—to darken cities a thousand miles distant and downpours of rain poured off the baked subsoil to wreak havoc in the valleys far distant. We are seeing in the West today the same accented forces which made vast habitable reaches of China a desert, which cause the periodic, death-dealing floods in the Yang-tze Kiang and Hoang Ho.

But if nature is unconquerable, so is man unconquerable. He can correct his mistakes and surely will. By impounding flood waters, terracing his farms with an eye to wind and weather, planting cover crops and even, perhaps, abandoning to wilderness again some of the land he claimed, balance will be restored to the natural order of things. The floods following the dust stormes are just so much warning that the curb may not be long delayed. Wind and water erosion are creeping cancers, swift to spread to healthy territory.

UNSAFE STREETS

CHILDREN must play. Children should play. But the more children plan, under certain conditions, the more of them are killed.

A survey has proved conclusively that traffic accidents in which children figure decrease as playgrounds and summer camps increase. Communities and neighborhoods most lacking in playgrounds most frequently witness the tragedy of a child ground to death under the wheels of a motor truck or injured, often fatally, by a motor car.

Murder? Manslaughter! Yes, but the indictment is not against the careless driver or negligent parent alone. What about the guilt of the community which fails to provide a safe place for its children to play?

Children must play, but they must not play in busy streets. The wheels of commerce and modes of transportation cannot be halted young America is at play. Every driver must use reasonable care to prevent accidents, but thoughtless and impetuous youth makes even reasonable care unavailing where children are at play in or near the street.

UNPROFITABLE CRIME

THE work of federal agents in apprehending two of the kidnapers of the Weyerhaeuser boy, locating their hideout in Spokane, Wash., and sweeping forward relentlessly in the search for other members of the gang, is a model of law enforcement effectiveness. Out of seventeen cases in which department of justice agents participated since passage of the Lindbergh kidnap law, fifteen have been solved. This record should convince the most daring and desperate of criminals that this particular form of crime is reasonably certain to lead to death or life imprisonment and that under the circumstances, it does not pay

MY HEART LEAPS UP

My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky:
So was it when my life began;
So is it now I am a man;
So be it when I shall grow old,
Or let me die!
The Child is father of the Man;
And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety.

STORMY LOVE

A YOUNG NAVY MAN'S ROMANCE — by BELLE BURNS GROMER

CHAPTER 38

IN THE LATE afternoon when the picnic party boarded the gig to return to Bremerton, grown-ups and children lounged on the deck or in the cockpit relaxed and peaceful after their day in the quiet woods. But drawn a space apart from the others, his brown arms clasped about his knees, Val sat staring toward the shore where blue haze veiled the skyward thrusts of fir and cedar and turned the little bays to deepest emerald.

Since that moment on the beach when he had realized with startling clarity the dangerous situation between Jan and himself, the knowledge had left him stunned. He was as one who has unknowingly ventured on a thin coating of lava, only to feel a tremendous seethe of forces beneath so dangerous as to forbid a single step further. During the remainder of the day Jan and he had scrupulously avoided each other. But now, even as his bewildered mind struggled with the problem that involved the happiness of three people, he fought the desire to let his hungry eyes seek her.

Lia and Jan—what a rotten deal he had given them both. He gazed down at the tide rushing through the narrows to make smooth whirlpools like sleek jade lily-pads. As he watched a drifting branch being caught in a whirl and then sucked abruptly into unknown depths, he thought that he, too, was a-spin in a vortex. In all his life he had never been so miserably unhappy—and yet, deep, deep in his consciousness, a strange exultation stirred.

It was almost six o'clock when he paused outside his own quarters, then squared his shoulders and went on into the bungalow. In the living room, clad in a soft gray Chinese robe and with peacock blue slippers on her little feet, Lia, Venetian bracelets clinking, the yellow-eyed Persian kitten crouched beside her, lay stretched on the divan.

"Hello," she greeted him unsmilingly, "how were all the red ants in the potato salad?"

"Very tasty, thanks," Val answered. "It was a pleasant day and I wish you had come along. You have never been out in these northwest woods. They are beautiful."

"I am afraid I am not very interested in woods," she murmured coldly.

The windows were open but the air in the room seemed to Val as dead as the faded flowers in the vases. He went into the study to mix himself a drink and when he had consumed it and poured a second he returned to the living room to sink wearily into a chair. "What have you been doing all day?" he asked. "Did you have a good rest?"

She swung her feet over the side of the couch and sat erect. "Rest!" she exclaimed. "I've had a beastly day while you were off enjoying yourself. Opal was simply outrageous. I thought it might be fun to have a few people in for suppah but she flatly refused to stay and serve."

Lia, he had discovered, did not get on well with servants; only the old-time southern darkies could be scolded roundly one moment and coddled the next. Even in China, the usually tractable amah or house-boy had frequently answered her with insolence as she in turn shrilly accused him of all manner of infractions. Indeed, Val thought, if all the Chinks who had lost face while serving Lia could be organized, the Japanese would not have a look-in in Manchuria.

"Well, you promised Opal Sunday afternoon off," he reminded her. "But if she was impertinent, dismiss her. I've never liked that gossip about the place, anyway."

"No. I—I'd rather not do that."

Poor little, unhappy Lia

Val stared at her. "Why not? You say she was rude."

She watched him from the veil of her silky lashes. "If only Opal were all I had to disturb me!" she said sulkily. Her small cherry mouth drew down at the corners. "Father was here," she added after a moment. "I wish he would go away and never come back. He isn't like my father. Sometimes he stares at me as if—as if he could kill me. Truly, you'd think it was my fault that my mother died when I was born. He won't even talk to me about her. Just sets his jaw and sits there looking like pictures of Mephistopheles."

Her eyes narrowed to slits of black glass. "I have been puzzling out a lot of things lately," she said slowly. "The Garennes haven't been wealthy since the Civil war, but my mother was the last of the rich Fitz-Jameses. The estate on the Santee was sold before her death but the family silver, jewels, portraits and her money must be in my father's possession. Not only that, the canary diamond necklace, the one the king's mistress passed on to her son, my ancestor, has been loaned to the Metropolitan for years. Today I told my father I thought it should be mine. And do you know what he did? He simply glared at me, swore terribly and then flung out and slammed the door."

Val took a deep draft of his highball. "What on earth do you want with a diamond necklace, honey?" he smiled. "Don't go out of your way to irritate the old boy. He's a strange chap, I know, but somehow, I like him. And I can't help feeling sorry for a man who seems so sort of—alone and embittered."

"Of course you would defend him. If you cared for my feelings you'd make him give me my rights. Oh, if you cared for me at all, you'd take me away from this place where everyone treats me shamefully!" She threw herself back among the cushions. "You have a chance to make us a fo'tune," she complained sullenly. "Cordray has offered to back your invention. You could take me to China, to Europe, to all the fascinating places in the world. You could give me the things I want. Oh, Val, why don't you love me that much? I'm so miserable here. And I have no one but you. Nobody cares——" She commenced to weep in low broken sobs.

He put the glass down slowly. Heartsick and hopeless as he felt, yet the sight of her unhappiness stirred the inevitable tenderness her dependence always engendered. He arose and stood over her for a moment, then seated himself on the divan and lifted her up in his arms to rock her back and forth, back and forth like a child.

Poor little unhappy Lia. Once she had been so gay and laughing but he had failed her unbelievably. And today had come a stern warning. Unless steps were taken to work out their problem, unless he saw to it that they ceased drifting, the Prestons' marriage was doomed for the rocks.

He realized now how difficult it was for two people who scarcely knew each other to come to a real understanding. During the first months of their marriage there had been so many forced separations while his ship was up the Yangtz. And now, since their arrival in Bremerton, he had devoted much of his spare time to his invention. In fact, Lia and he had never really had a chance to become friends—they had been only lovers.

Now their nerves were unstrung, they needed to get away, to be alone together where they could build a new and more enduring foundation. A swift remembrance crossed his mind of the retreat Nora Cromwell had described that day, the place called Paradise lake. This was June and the weather promised to be perfect. Suddenly he found himself offering Lia an enthusiastic account of the mountain haven. He told her of Towner's Mill on the canal where a pack train could be had to transport passengers and supplies to the peaceful lake that was like a sapphire set in a ring of emerald foothills and with the mountains beyond.

"What chance have we to be happy when we don't really know each other, dear?" he finally said. "Let's go away for my leave. There will be no one else at the lake this early in the season. We could talk and work and play together. I want to take care of you, dear. I want to be a good husband. Give me the chance, Lia. Say that you want to come away with me. Please say it."

Poems That Live

ODE ON SOLITUDE

Happy the man, whose wish and care
A few paternal acres bound,
Content to breathe his native air
In his own ground.

Whose herds with milk, whose fields with bread,
Whose flocks supply him with attire,
Whose trees in summer yield him shade,
In winter fire.

Blest, who can unconcern'dly find
Hours, days, and years, slide soft away,
In health of body, peace of mind,
Quiet by day.

Sound sleep by night; study and ease,
Together mixt; sweet recreation;
And innocence, which most does please
With meditation.

Thus let me live, unseen, unknown;
Thus unlamented let me die,
Steal from the world, and not a stone
Tell where I lie.

Editorial Of The Day

Nature's Mysterious Ways.

(The Cincinnati Enquirer)

Nature, to paraphrase the hymn, moves in a mysterious way her wonders to perform. Last summer in the terrific heat, with the thermometer day after day above a hundred and with a drought which lasted for months, the grass withered in the fields and the leaves of the trees turned yellow and dropped before their time.

Farmers said the grass roots had been burned and the foresters said the trees, like their leaves, would droop and die.

But go abroad and see what has happened. Never before was there so verdant a spring. Never did the blossoming shrubs have a greater wealth of flowers, and the trees have shaken out their foliage in abundant measure. The pastures and meadows are lush with grass.

Nature seems bent on atoning for the cruel wrongs of last year. The fields of wheat, almost ready for the reaper, are hastening toward a generous harvest. All the countryside has been blessed with rain and is beautiful to behold. It recalls the story of Job, who suffered much yet in the end the Lord blessed him with twice as much as he had before.

Why Sleeping and Waking Are Considered Mysteries

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

SLEEP HAS always stirred men's wonder and their imagination. Medicine men, priests, soothsayers and Freudians have attached a significance more or less mystical, to all its phenomena, from dreams to somnambulism. The utterances of those who talk in their sleep are regarded with awe, as if they came from another being or another world. The body is simply a medium, a playground for the denizens of the spirit universe during that strange suspension of the physiological functions.

Dr. Clendening

Insomnia, too, has always evoked dread in the victim and wonder in his associates. The youthful David lulling his master, Saul, when the waking fit was upon him, is a picture typical of a long line of the great of the earth fighting this state when the body and mind long for forgetfulness and cannot gain it.

Perhaps the problem of sleep—for no man knows what sleep is, in its essence—will be solved best by finding out why we stay awake.

"To limit the desire for stimulation is a constant preoccupation of mankind," says an eminent English neurologist. So we would rather sleep than be awake. We drift through life from sleep into wakefulness. Foetal life is a long benign slumber. Only when the rude air of earth strikes the new-born baby does he wake long enough to cry his protest. And soon he sleeps again, and the infant's existence is mostly sleep, interrupted only by the brief periods of wakefulness during which he receives nourishment.

Perhaps it is the association of wakefulness with the pleasure of feeding which induces us subconsciously to decide to stay awake longer. At any rate we do so, and we can imagine primitive man setting aside that period of each day when he could no longer see his world, for the daily period of rest and forgetfulness.

Animals Sleep All Winter

Many animals go even further, and sleep all through the season when the days are mostly dark. If we think human sleep is mysterious, it is simple compared to the mystery of the unconsciousness of hibernating animals.

One of my biologic friends has studied this phenomenon extensively. A hibernating animal will gradually go into a state of almost complete suspension of all functions. He breathes about once an hour or often less—in some species ten or twelve times in the twenty-four hours. The heart rate drops down to four or five beats a minute.

And yet during these long periods when the breath of life and the movement of blood is stopped, the cells of the body are still alive. When the long sleep is over and the warmth of the sun has once more come to the earth, it is fascinating to watch the hibernating animal; first, he gives himself a little shake; gradually, hour by hour, his pulse and breathing rate increase, and soon his blinking eyes are looking about for sustenance.

Yes, the mystery of waking is quite as potent as the mystery of sleep.

The charm and beauty of the Mediterranean setting in "Let's Live Tonight," which opened yesterday at the Cliftona Theatre, provides an entrancing background for the captivating love story the film unfolds. Co-starring Lilian Harvey, who has never appeared more beautiful, and the suave, continental Tullio Carminati, fresh from his recent triumph in "One Night of Love," "Let's Live Tonight" is a delightful entertainment, handsomely mounted and lavishly produced.

Victor Schertzinger, the great director of "One Night of Love," deserves much praise for the highly diverting, spontaneous and exhilarating tempo which he infused into the romantic goings-on. It is he, too, who also wrote the lovely score for "Let's Live Tonight." Love Passes By," the hit tune is sung by Tullio Carminati with great effect and remarkable voice.

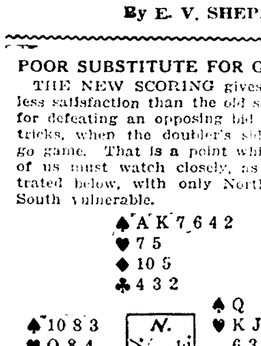
POOR SUBSTITUTE FOR GAME

THE NEW SCORING gives even less satisfaction than the old scoring for defeating an opposing bid a few tricks, when the doubler's side can go game. That is a point which all of us must watch closely, as illustrated below, with only North and South vulnerable.

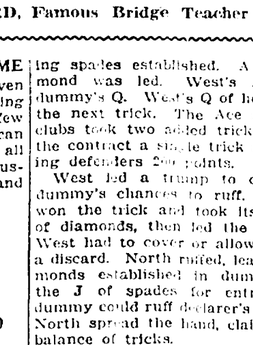


Bidding went: West, 1-No Trump; North passed, hoping to defeat the contract with his long suit of spades; East, 2-Hearts; South, 3-Diamonds; West, passed, to see what partner would do; North, 3-Spades; East, 4-Clubs, showing a real two-suiter and considerable strength; South, 4-Spades, which West doubled, ending bidding, although East should have bid 5-Hearts and either gone game or allowed partner to double further spade bidding for a more adequate penalty.

When partner has bid no trump as an opener to the auction, lead your longest and strongest suit, do not try for a ruff. East's opening lead was the J of hearts, as partner's no trump had announced strength in at least three suits. Dummy's Ace won the first trick and declarer's K of trumps took the second trick, leaving spades established. A low diamond was led. West's Ace took dummy's Q. West's Q of hearts won the next trick. The Ace and Q of clubs took two added tricks, setting the contract a single trick and scoring defenders 200 points.

West led a trump to cut down dummy's chances to ruff. Dummy won the trick and took its good K of diamonds, then led the 9, which West had to cover or allow declarer a discard. North ruffed, leaving diamonds established in dummy with the J of spades for entry. Also dummy could ruff declarer's last club. North spread the hand, claiming the balance of tricks.

East and West could have won the rubber had they chosen to go game, in lieu of collecting 200 penalty points from opponents on this hand, as West went game on the next hand, but the hand after South won game and rubber.



North plays 6-Spades doubled. He ruffs a heart lead, leads the K of spades, enters dummy with its Q of clubs and leads the 10 of spades. Before Monday see if the small slam can be made against West's best defense.

NATURE UNLEASHED

FLOODS succeeding drought in the corn country may cause wonder at the extremes of capricious nature, but there is close correlation between the dust storms denuding farms of topsoil and raging rivers which submerge whole communities. Both are, in their cataclysmic effects, the direct result of man's interference with natural balances.

Miles upon square miles of farmlands were once covered with tough turf, rank prairie vegetation and forests. When the months passed without rain this growth conserved the moisture in the ground and anchored the topsoil to the terrain. When rain fell, the matted shrubs and grasses sponged up the waters. Then came a generation of plowmen who ripped up the turf, powdered the soil and in search of wealth prepared for disaster. Hot, dry winds whirl up the plowed soil—to darken cities a thousand miles distant and downpours of rain poured off the baked subsoil to wreak havoc in the valleys far distant. We are seeing in the West today the same accented forces which made vast habitable reaches of China a desert, which cause the periodic, death-dealing floods in the Yang-tze Kiang and Hoang Ho.

But if nature is unconquerable, so is man unconquerable. He can correct his mistakes and surely will. By impounding flood waters, terracing his farms with an eye to wind and weather, planting cover crops and even, perhaps, abandoning to wilderness again some of the land he claimed, balance will be restored to the natural order of things. The floods following the dust stormes are just so much warning that the curb may not be long delayed. Wind and water erosion are creeping cancers, swift to spread to healthy territory.

UNSAFE STREETS

CHILDREN must play. Children should play. But the more children plan, under certain conditions, the more of them are killed.

A survey has proved conclusively that traffic accidents in which children figure decrease as playgrounds and summer camps increase. Communities and neighborhoods most lacking in playgrounds most frequently witness the tragedy of a child ground to death under the wheels of a motor truck or injured, often fatally, by a motor car.

Murder! Manslaughter! Yes, but the indictment is not against the careless driver or negligent parent alone. What about the guilt of the community which fails to provide a safe place for its children to play?

Children must play, but they must not play in busy streets. The wheels of commerce and modes of transportation cannot be halted young America is at play. Every driver must use reasonable care to prevent accidents, but thoughtless and impetuous youth makes even reasonable care unavailing where children are at play in or near the street.

STORMY LOVE

A YOUNG NAVY MAN'S ROMANCE — by BELLE BURNS GROMER

CHAPTER 38

IN THE LATE afternoon when the picnic party boarded the gig to return to Bremerton, grown-ups and children lounged on the deck or in the cockpit relaxed and peaceful after their day in the quiet woods. But drawn a space apart from the others, his brown arms clasped about his knees, Val sat staring toward the shore where blue haze veiled the skyward thrusts of fir and cedar and turned the little bays to deepest emerald.

Since that moment on the beach when he had realized with startling clarity the dangerous situation between Jan and himself, the knowledge had left him stunned. He was as one who has unknowingly ventured on a thin coating of lava, only to feel a tremendous seethe of forces beneath so dangerous as to forbid a single step further. During the remainder of the day Jan and he had scrupulously avoided each other. But now, even as his bewildered mind struggled with the problem that involved the happiness of three people, he fought the desire to let his hungry eyes seek her.

Lia and Jan—what a rotten deal he had given them both. He gazed down at the tide rushing through the narrows to make smooth whirlpools like sleek jade lily-pads. As he watched a drifting branch being caught in a whirl and then sucked abruptly into unknown depths, he thought that he, too, was a-spin in a vortex. In all his life he had never been so miserably unhappy—and yet, deep, deep in his consciousness, a strange exultation stirred.

It was almost six o'clock when he paused outside his own quarters, then squared his shoulders and went on into the bungalow. In the living room, clad in a soft gray Chinese robe and with peacock blue slippers on her little feet, Lia, Venetian bracelets clinking, the yellow-eyed Persian kitten crouched beside her, lay stretched on the divan.

"Hello," she greeted him unsmilingly, "how were all the red ants in the potato salad?"

"Very tasty, thanks," Val answered. "It was a pleasant day and I wish you had come along. You have never been out in these northwest woods. They are beautiful."

"I am afraid I am not ve'y interested in woods," she murmured coldly.

The windows were open but the air in the room seemed to Val as dead as the faded flowers in the vases. He went into the study to mix himself a drink and when he had consumed it and poured a second he returned to the living room to sink wearily into a chair. "What have you been doing all day?" he asked. "Did you have a good rest?"

She swung her feet over the side of the couch and sat erect. "Rest!" she exclaimed. "I've had a beastly day while you were off enjoying yourself. Opal was simply outrageous. I thought it might be fun to have a few people in for suppah but she flatly refused to stay and serve."

Lia, he had discovered, did not get on well with servants; only the old-time southern darkies could be scolded roundly one moment and coddled the next. Even in China, the usually tractable amah or house-boy had frequently answered her with insolence as she in turn shrilly accused him of all manner of infractions. Indeed, Val thought, if all the Chinks who had lost face while serving Lia could be organized, the Japanese would not have a look-in in Manchuria.

"Well, you promised Opal Sunday afternoon off," he reminded her. "But if she was impertinent, dismiss her. I've never liked that gossip about the place, anyway."

"No. I—I'd rather not do that."

Poor little, unhappy Lia

Val stared at her. "Why not? You say she was rude."

She watched him from the veil of her silky lashes. "If only Opal were all I had to distuhb me!" she said sulkily. Her small cherry mouth drew down at the corners. "Father was here," she added after a moment. "I wish he would go away and nevah come back. He isn't like my father. Sometimes he stares at me as if—as if he could kill me. Truly, you'd think it was my fault that my mother died when I was born. He won't even talk to me about her. Just sets his jaw and sits there looking like pictures of Mephistopheles."

Her eyes narrowed to slits of black glass. "I have been puzzling out a lot of things lately," she said slowly. "The Garennes haven't been wealthy since the Civil war, but my mother was the last of the rich Fitz-Jameses. The estate on the Santee was sold before her death but the family silver, jewels, portraits and her money must be in my father's possession. Not only that, the canary diamond necklace, the one the king's mistress passed on to her son, my ancestor, has been loaned to the Metropolitan for years. Today I told my father I thought it should be mine. And do you know what he did? He simply glared at me, swore teh'bly and then flung out and slammed the door."

Val took a deep draft of his highball. "What on earth do you want with a diamond necklace, honey?" he smiled. "Don't go out of your way to irritate the old boy. He's a strange chap, I know, but somehow, I like him. And I can't help feeling sorry for a man who seems so sort of—alone and embittered."

"Of course you would defend him. If you cared for my feelings you'd make him give me my rights. Oh, if you cared for me at all, you'd take me away from this place where everyone treats me shamefully!" She threw herself back among the cushions. "You have a chance to make us a fo'tune," she complained sullenly. "Cordray has offered to back your invention. You could take me to China, to Europe, to all the fascinating places in the world. You could give me the things I want. Oh, Val, why don't you love me that much? I'm so misc'able here. And I have no one but you. Nobody cares——" She commenced to weep in low broken sobs.

Poems That Live

ODE ON SOLITUDE

Happy the man, whose wish and care
A few paternal acres bound,
Content to breathe his native air
In his own ground.

Whose herds with milk, whose fields with bread,
Whose flocks supply him with attire,
Whose trees in summer yield him shade,
In winter fire.

Blest, who can unconcern'dly find
Hours, days, and years, slide soft away,
In health of body, peace of mind,
Quiet by day.

Sound sleep by night; study and ease,
Together mixt; sweet recreation;
And innocence, which most does please
With meditation.

Thus let me live, unseen, unknown;
Thus unlamented let me die,
Steal from the world, and not a stone
Tell where I lie.

—Alexander Pope

Editorial Of The Day

Nature's Mysterious Ways.

(The Cincinnati Enquirer)

Nature, to paraphrase the hymn, moves in a mysterious way her wonders to perform. Last summer in the terrific heat, with the thermometer day after day above a hundred and with a drought which lasted for months, the grass withered in the fields and the leaves of the trees turnd yellow and dropped before their time.

Farmers said the grass roots had been burned and the foresters said the trees, like their leaves, would droop and die.

But go abroad and see what has happened. Never before was there so verdant a spring. Never did the blossoming shrubs have a greater wealth of flowers, and the trees have shaken out their foliage in abundant measure. The pastures and meadows are lush with grass.

Nature seems bent on atoning for the cruel wrongs of last year. The fields of wheat, almost ready for the reaper, are hastening toward a generous harvest. All the countryside has been blessed with rain and is beautiful to behold. It recalls the story of Job, who suffered much, yet in the end the Lord blessed him with twice as much as he had before.

Why Sleeping and Waking Are Considered Mysteries

By LOGAN GLENDENING, M. D.

SLEEP HAS always stirred men's wonder and their imagination. Medicine men, priests, soothsayers and Freudians have attached a significance more or less mystical, to all its phenomena, from dreams to somnambulism. The utterances of those who talk in their sleep are regarded with awe, as if they came from another being or another world. The body is simply a medium, a playground for the denizens of the spirit universe during that strange suspension of the physiological functions.

Dr. Clendening

Insomnia, too, has always evoked dread in the victim and wonder in his associates. The youthful David lulling his master, Saul, when the waking fit was upon him, is a picture typical of a long line of the great of the earth fighting this state when the body and mind long for forgetfulness and cannot gain it.

Perhaps the problem of sleep—for no man knows what sleep is, in its essence—will be solved best by finding out why we stay awake.

"To limit the desire for stimulation is a constant preoccupation of mankind," says an eminent English neurologist. So we would rather sleep than be awake. We drift through life from sleep into wakefulness. Foetal life is a long benign slumber. Only when the rude air of earth strikes the new-born baby does he wake long enough to cry his protest.

And soon he sleeps again, and the infant's existence is mostly sleep, interrupted only by the brief periods of wakefulness during which he receives nourishment.

Perhaps it is this association of wakefulness with the pleasure of feeding which induces us subconsciously to decide to stay awake longer. At any rate we do so, and we can imagine primitive man setting aside that period of each day when he could no longer see his world, for the daily period of rest and forgetfulness.

Animals Sleep All Winter

Many animals go even further, and sleep all through the season when the days are mostly dark. If we think human sleep is mysterious, it is simple compared to the mystery of the unconsciousness of hibernating animals.

One of my biologic friends has studied this phenomenon extensively. A hibernating animal will gradually go into a state of almost complete suspension of all functions. He breathes about once an hour or often less—in some species ten or twelve times in the twenty-four hours. The heart rate drops down to four or five beats a minute.

And yet during these long periods when the breath of life and the movement of blood is stopped, the cells of the body are still alive. When the long sleep is over and the warmth of the sun has once more come to the earth, it is fascinating to watch the hibernating animal; first, he gives himself a little shake; gradually, hour by hour, his pulse and breathing rate increase, and soon his blinking eyes are looking about for sustenance.

Yes, the mystery of waking is quite as potent as the mystery of sleep.

CITIES SERVICE AND ESHELMAN TEAMS TANGLE

Pickaway Dairy to Play Three Games; Ashville Wins In League, 5 to 2.

Cities Service Oils and Eshelman Feeds will meet this evening, weather permitting, in what should be an interesting recreation ball game.

To date, the hitters in the league have been much better than the pitchers since many big scores have been tallied. Last Friday evening the Circleville Oils clubbed Carl Purcell, who had previously been invincible, and practically every other hurler in the league has been plastered.

If Purcell and Bill Hegele are both in form this evening the game should be a hit one. If either is off the other team will profit. However, both have good reserve hurlers, Lloyd Leasure being available for the Feeds and Leonard Buskirk always ready to "go" for the Oils.

Dairy Team Busy

The remainder of the week's lineup includes:

Tuesday: Pickaway Dairy vs. Jones Specials.

Wednesday: Pickaway Dairy vs. Cities Service Oils.

Thursday: Pickaway Dairy vs. Purina Chows.

Friday is open but the first game rained out this week, if any, will be played then. The Dairy crew has three games this week since several of its contests have been postponed. If all games are played as scheduled the week-end will see all teams having played each other once.

ASHVILLE IS VICTOR

Ashville refused to waste any hits Sunday and defeated Grove City, 5 to 2. The up-countians with Art Meier on the mound scored only five hits off the slants of Waples but made them all count.

Meier was touched eight times but kept all his bingles well-scattered. The Ashville team by its victory retains a tight grasp on second place.

Other scores were: Gahanna, 6, Derby, 4; Brice. 17, Obetz, 14; Columbus Police, 11, Lafayette, 1.

SPECIALS WIN, 9-8

Squirrel Jones' Specials and Bill Howe's Cubs tangled in a hot ball game Sunday on the SOElectric lot with the former eking out a 9 to 8 victory. The game was nip and tuck the whole way with Don Johnson and Everett Whaley meeting on the hill.

A recreation ball game between the Cities Service Oils and Knickerbocker theatres of Columbus failed to materialize with the Columbus outfit failing to appear on the field.

HASSETT INJURED, BIRDS ANNEX TWO

COLUMBUS, June 17.—Although the Columbus Red Birds won a double-header from Toledo, the Birds and their followers were a sadalot today.

John "Bud" Hassett, youthful first baseman of the Red Birds whose play has been close to phenominal this year, broke his ankle in the first inning of the first game sliding home. Hospital attaches reported he would be inactive for at least one month. Don Hurst, former major leaguer, replaced the injured star.

The injury darkened the day for most Bird followers but the 7 to 2 and 6 to 4 victories over the Mudhens helped to brighten the day temporarily. Jim Winford held the Toledoans in bay during the opener although the Hens managed to get 12 hits. Winford's ability to get out of holes was demonstrated by the fact that 10 Hens were stranded on bases in the opener.

The Mudhens outhit the Flock 14 to 7 in the nightcap but Chambers, Mooney, and Klinger, Columbus pitchers, emulated Winford's feat of keeping the Toledo hits scattered.

JOE SIMS TO HOUSTON

COLUMBUS, June 17. President George M. Trautman of the Columbus Red Birds announced today Joe Sims, youthful pitcher, had beeno sold to the Houston Texas League club. Sims served principally in the role of relief hurler.

REVOLTA WINS WESTERN OPEN

Goggin Fails on Final Holes Permitting Milwaukee Star To Win.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., June 17.—Red, unruly locks and a jutting jaw. He's got a fighter's looks and a fighter's heart, this new 24-year-old Western open golf champion, Johnny Revolta of Milwaukee.

With 72-hole total of 290, Johnny swept to victory on the tricky Chain O'Lakes course here over a stellar field of golfers, late yesterday afternoon.

He was under pressure from the first to last hole, the final double round with a 36-hole score of 144, he came through with a neat pair of '3's, under shooting his nearest rival, Willie Goggin of San Francisco by four strokes.

That doesn't tell the story, however, for Goggin wobbled badly on the last hole taking a six and Johnny had a sub par 35.

Revolta's winning total wasn't spectacular, but considering the weather and course it was well worthy of a major championship. Rain fell intermittently throughout the day. A brisk wind blew many added yards to the long holes making the narrow twisting fairways even more hazardous.

OWENS MUST STEP UP HIS RECORDS

LOS ANGELES, June 17.—Jesse Owens, Ohio State's dusky phantom, must run faster, hurdle better and perhaps jump farther in the N. C. A. A. meet at Berkeley next weekend if he is to roll up four first places against the 'cream of the crop' of the nation's athletes, observers here predicted today after his showing in the dual meet between Southern California and the Buckeyes Saturday.

Owens gained four victories Saturday but set no records.

On the basis of his 9.7 seconds for the 100 yards, 20.7 for the 220 yards; 23.1 for the low hurdles and 24 feet 5¾ inches in the broad jump, Owens presented vulnerable spots at which men like George Anderson, Glenn Hardin and Enkare Peacock can strike, it was pointed out.

JOE CARR IS CZAR OF PRO GRIDDERS

CHICAGO, Ill., June 17.—With increased powers making him virtually czar of the game, Joe E. Carr of Columbus, O., today had a new five year contract as president of the National Professional Football league.

Representatives at the Sunday meeting adopted a new constitution providing heavier fines for violation of the rule forbidding league members to dicker with college athletes until their class is graduated and setting up a finance committee.

Appointed to the new committee are Lee Joannes of the Green Bay Packers, chairman; John V. Mara, New York Giants; George Halas, Chicago Bears; and Bert Bell, Philadelphia Eagles. Carl Storck of Dayton was re-elected vice-president and secretary.

While no announcement of Carr's salary was made, it was understood he got a substantial raise.

About This And That

BY THE SECOND GUESSER

Wallace Nearly Out

Fred B. Wallace, perennial athletic director at Lancaster, came mighty near being ousted Friday evening when the board of education controlling Lancaster schools met—Strangely, a former Pickaway-co man had the vote in his power to cast Wallace upon the street as an unemployed; Arthur B. Vlerebome, formerly of this city and New Holland—Vlerebome is a member of the board and when a motion was made to refuse to rehire Wallace, the ballot stood 2 to 2 when it reached Vlerebome—He refused to vote so the ouster move failed * * *

Retired and Slashed

Later in the evening the board voted unanimously to re-employ the entire slate as recommanded by the superintendent—Wallace was among that group, but his salary next year was cut from $2,169 to $1,872—Wallace just completed his thirteenth year at Lancaster * * *

Graduate of Duke

Young Mr. Ken Weafer, who started the second game for Toledo against the Red Birds Sunday, is a graduate of Duke university where he starred on the mound and is the property of the Chicago Cubs—The Birds greeted him with plenty of hits although ragged support got him in a big hole * * *

Hurst Protested

The Birds pulled a quick one Sunday after Bud Hassett, young first sacker, broke an ankle sliding into the plate on his home run inside the park—Don Hurst, vet infielder, was on the Columbus bench but has not yet been put on the eligible list—When Hassett was hurt Manager Blades instructed President Red Trautman to wire Thomas J. Hickey that Hurst had been put on the eligible list—Why he hadn't been on before, since the club was not at its player limit, is beyond us—Manager Fred Haney of Toledo protested both games because of Hurst's appearance—The big left-hander does not yet seem in condition * * *

CITIES SERVICE AND ESHELMAN TEAMS TANGLE

Pickaway Dairy to Play Three Games; Ashville Wins In League, 5 to 2.

Cities Service Oils and Eshelman Feeds will meet this evening, weather permitting, in what should be an interesting recreation ball game.

To date, the hitters in the league have been much better than the pitchers since many big scores have been tallied. Last Friday evening the Circleville Oils clubbed Carl Purcell, who had previously been invincible, and practically every other hurler in the league has been plastered.

If Purcell and Bill Hegele are both in form this evening the game should be a hit one. If either is off the other team will profit. However, both have good reserve hurlers, Lloyd Leasure being available for the Feeds and Leonard Buskirk always ready to "go" for the Oils.

Dairy Team Busy

The remainder of the week's lineup includes:

Tuesday: Pickaway Dairy vs. Jones Specials.

Wednesday: Pickaway Dairy vs. Cities Service Oils.

Thursday: Pickaway Dairy vs. Purina Chows.

Friday is open but the first game rained out this week, if any, will be played then. The Dairy crew has three games this week since several of its contests have been postponed. If all games are played as scheduled the week-end will see all teams having played each other once.

ASHVILLE IS VICTOR

Ashville refused to waste any hits Sunday and defeated Grove City, 5 to 2. The up-countians with Art Meier on the mound scored only five hits off the slants of Waples but made them all count.

Meier was touched eight times but kept all his bingles well-scattered. The Ashville team by its victory retains a tight grasp on second place.

Other scores were: Gahanna, 6, Derby, 4; Brice. 17, Obetz, 14; Columbus Police, 11, Lafayette, 1.

SPECIALS WIN 9-8

Squirrel Jones' Specials and Bill Howe's Cubs tangled in a hot ball game Sunday on the SOEElectric lot with the former eking out a 9 to 8 victory. The game was nip and tuck the whole way with Don Johnson and Everett Whaley meeting on the hill.

A recreation ball game between the Cities Service Oils and Knickerbocker theatres of Columbus failed to materialize with the Columbus outfit failing to appear on the field.

HASSETT INJURED, BIRDS ANNEX TWO

COLUMBUS, June 17.—Although the Columbus Red Birds won a double-header from Toledo, the Birds and their followers were a sad lot today.

John "Bud" Hassett, youthful first baseman of the Red Birds whose play has been close to phenominal this year, broke his ankle in the first inning of the first game sliding home. Hospital attaches reported he would be inactive for at least one month. Don Hurst, former major leaguer, replaced the injured star.

The injury darkened the day for most Bird followers but the 7 to 2 and 6 to 4 victories over the Mudhens helped to brighten the day temporarily. Jim Winford held the Toledoans in bay during the opener although the Hens managed to get 12 hits. Winford's ability to get out of holes was demonstrated by the fact that 10 Hens were stranded on bases in the opener.

The Mudhens outhit the Flock 14 to 7 in the nightcap but Chambers, Mooney, and Klinger, Columbus pitchers, emulated Winford's feat of keeping the Toledo hits scattered.

JOE SIMS TO HOUSTON

COLUMBUS, June 17.—President George M. Trautman of the Columbus Red Birds announced today Joe Sims, youthful pitcher, had beeno sold to the Houston Texas League club. Sims served principally in the role of relief hurler.

REVOLTA WINS WESTERN OPEN

Goggin Fails on Final Holes Permitting Milwaukee Star To Win.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., June 17.—Red, unruly looks and a jutting jaw. He's got a fighter's looks and a fighter's heart, this new 24-year-old Western open golf champion, Johnny Revolta of Milwaukee.

With 72-hole total of 290, Johnny swept to victory on the tricky Chain O'Lakes course here over a stellar field of golfers, late yesterday afternoon.

He was under pressure from the first to last hole, the final double round with a 36-hole score of 144, he came through with a neat pair of '3's, under shooting his nearest rival, Willie Goggin of San Francisco by four strokes.

That doesn't tell the story, however, for Goggin wobbled badly on the last hole taking a six and Johnny had a sub par 35.

Revolta's winning total wasn't spectacular, but considering the weather and course it was well worthy of a major championship. Rain fell intermittently throughout the day. A brisk wind blew many added yards to the long holes making the narrow twisting fairways even more hazardous.

OWENS MUST STEP UP HIS RECORDS

LOS ANGELES, June 17.--Jesse Owens, Ohio State's dusky phantom, must run faster, hurdle better and perhaps jump farther in the N. C. A. A. meet at Berkeley next weekend if he is to roll up four first places against the 'cream of the crop' of the nation's athletes, observers here predicted today after his showing in the dual meet between Southern California and the Buckeyes Saturday.

Owens gained four victories Saturday but set no records.

On the basis of his 9.7 seconds for the 100 yards, 20.7 for the 220 yards; 23.1 for the low hurdles and 24 feet 5¾ inches in the broad jump, Owens presented vulnerable spots at which men like George Anderson, Glenn Hardin and Eulace Peacock can strike, it was pointed out.

JOE CARR IS CZAR OF PRO GRIDDERS

CHICAGO, Ill., June 17.—With increased powers making him virtually czar of the game, Joe E. Carr of Columbus, O., today had a new five year contract as president of the National Professional Football league.

Representatives at the Sunday meeting adopted a new constitution providing heavier fines for violation of the rule forbidding league members to dicker with college athletes until their class is graduated and setting up a finance committee.

Appointed to the new committee are Lee Joannes of the Green Bay Packers, chairman; John V. Mara, New York Giants; George Halas, Chicago Bears; and Bert Bell, Philadelphia Eagles. Carl Storck of Dayton was re-elected vice-president and secretary.

While no announcement of Carr's salary was made, it was understood he got a substantial raise.

About This And That

BY THE SECOND GUESSER

Wallace Nearly Out

Fred B. Wallace, perennial athletic director at Lancaster, came mighty near being ousted Friday evening when the board of education controlling Lancaster schools met—Strangely, a former Pickaway-co man had the vote in his power to cast Wallace upon the street as an unemployed; Arthur B. Vlerebome, formerly of this city and New Holland—Vlerebome is a member of the board and when a motion was made to refuse to rehire Wallace, the ballot stood 2 to 2 when it reached Vlerebome—He refused to vote so the ouster move failed * * *

Rehired and Slashed

Later in the evening the board voted unanimously to re-employ the entire slate as recommanded by the superintendent—Wallace was among that group but his salary next year was cut from $2,169 to $1,872—Wallace just completed his thirteenth year at Lancaster * * *

Graduate of Duke

Young Mr. Ken Weafer, who started the second game for Toledo against the Red Birds Sunday, is a graduate of Duke university where he starred on the mound and is the property of the Chicago Cubs—The Birds greeted him with plenty of hits although ragged support got him in a big hole * * *

Hurst Protested

The Birds pulled a quick one Sunday after Bud Hassett, young first sacker, broke an ankle sliding into the plate on his home run inside the park—Don Hurst, vet infielder, was on the Columbus bench but has not yet been put on the eligible list—When Hassett was hurt Manager Blades instructed President Red Trautman to wire Thomas J. Hickey that Hurst had been put on the eligible list—Why he hadn't been on before, since the club was not at its player limit, is beyond us—Manager Fred Haney of Toledo protested both games because of Hurst's appearance—The big left-hander does not yet seem in condition * * *

Former President Outlines Nine Point Plan For Social Recovery.

PALO ALTO, Cal., June 17 — Rumblings caused by former President Herbert Hoover's sharp address yesterday at Stanford university commencement day exercises reverberated today in political circles, presaging a bitter presidential campaign in 1936.

Mr. Hoover, speaking to an audience of more than 15,000 including 699 Stanford graduates, outlined a nine-point program for social security in America, based fundamentally on individual freedom.

His address contained several barbed criticisms of administration policies. At one time he referred to "hothouse policies." Another jibe was at governmental "pollution of free press and free thought." At another point in his address he declared, referring to recovery, there was a "babel of tongues" prevalent today.

Nine Points Aired

The nine points of Mr. Hoover's program, given in his address entitled, "The Essentials of Social Growth in America," were:

1. Guarantee freedom of speech, thought, worship, initiative with reward for the efforts of the individual.
2. Insure natural production of commodities without interference by the government.
3. Maintain constitutional government with the proper division of powers.
4. Avoid abuses in government which spring from "left" and "right" wings; avoid concentration of economic powers.
5. Institute long time planning in an attempt to stabilize economic functioning.
6. Expand relief mechanism to guard against old age poverty and unemployment.
7. Plan for elimination of child labor, slums, marginal farmers, industrial conflicts and other correlated problems.
8. Create wider spread property ownership.
9. Upbuild and protect the home and family.

After outlining his social security program, the former president gave four "observations" in which he dealt several blows at the administration.

PATTERN 9394

It is not so much "cut" as "cut" that makes for distinctiveness in dress for the more mature woman. In this utterly simple afternoon frock Marian Martin cleverly employs the scallop motif as a decorative note consistent with the dignity of the gown and wearer! The graceful flattery of the cape is slenderizing when it starts in center front and takes a sweeping line to the back. The trim skirt yoke strikes a harmonious note in its scallop cut. Do make up one of the lovely new sheers in cotton or silk for afternoon wear. You might add a cluster of flowers at the neck for dressier occasions. Complete, Diagrammed Marian Martin Sew Chart included.

Pattern 9394 may be ordered only in sizes 16, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards 39 inch fabric.

Why Senator Wagner Is Fighting for His Bills

tenement in the German Yorkville section of New York.

He sold newspapers on the streets of New York before he could speak English. He worked in a grocery store in the afternoon while attending grammar school. He worked his way through the College of the City of New York by tutoring and as a hat check boy at the New York Athletic club.

A graduate of New York University Law school, Senator Wagner's first plunge into the political arena was as a member of the New York assembly from 1905 to 1908.

A member of the New York senate from 1909 to 1918, Wagner was chairman of the New York State Factory Investigating commission in 1911, and was lieutenant governor in 1914. Eight years he served as Democratic leader of the New York senate and shoulder to shoulder he worked with President Roosevelt at that time a state senator, in support of public welfare measures.

Adviser to President

That close co-operation between Wagner and President Roosevelt has continued without interruption ever since. He is an intimate adviser of the chief executive on his social security legislation.

Wagner resigned as a justice of the appellate division of the New York supreme court in 1926 to enter the United States senate. His present term expires in 1939.

His liberalism manifested itself even as a supreme court justice in New York. He is credited with having issued as a judge the first injunction in the country in favor of a labor union.

He wrote New York state's workmen's compensation law, which protects workers and their dependents from loss through industrial accidents.

"Employers and the magnates of industry used to cry, 'It can't be done. Your bill will ruin us,'" Senator Wagner remarked in recounting oldtime battles, adding:

"And they still make that cry. But it has been done and reforms enacted into law for the benefit of the worker have been a blessing. Those who scoffed later praised."

His Personal Taste

The conversation turned to personal matters. Wiener Schnitzel is a favorite food of the senator. He prefers beer to champagne. Bob Wagner is a stylish but not flashy dresser. He appears in the senate in symphonies of blue, gray or brown—a short, thick-set and big-chinned legislator, who no longer resorts to flights of oratory but pounds home statistics, facts, in a well-modulated voice.

A widower, his interest is wrapped in his son, a student at Yale law school. He works long hours, frequently journeys to and from New York by airplane. Vacations he passes abroad, where he gathers information for social welfare measures he pushes in the senate, such as the old-age pension and unemployment insurance bill.

Senator Wagner piloted through the senate the National Industrial Recovery act, which the United States supreme court held unconstitutional. The senator naturally was grieved by that decision, but was satisfied with the thought that NRA in full bloom rescued the nation in the gloomy days of early 1933.

His "Pet" Bill

Always having several bills in the legislative hopper, Wagner's pet has been his so-called labor disputes bill, creating a federal board to settle capital-labor disputes, prescribing many "don'ts" for employers in their relations with employes, outlawing company-dominated unions and generally facilitating unionization of employes.

In addition, Senator Wagner recently has been bending his efforts toward passage of a bill for a gigantic federal housing program, to clear away slums and give the underprivileged opportunity to live in sanitary, sunny quarters.

7 TALKS MADE IN FHA DEDICATION

A small but interested group attended the Better Housing exercises conducted at the "Cassabelle Tea Room" Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock when the tea room built under the Federal Housing plan by Mrs. Luella Plummer was officially opened.

Mack Parrett, chairman of the program, introduced the following speakers who gave short but interesting talks, M. E. Corotis, assistant director of the Southern Ohio district of the Federal Housing administration; W. B. Cady, mayor; Mrs. Clark Will, president of the Child Conservation league; K. J. Herrmann, president of the Chamber of Commerce; T. O. Gilliland, chairman of the Federal Housing Administration of Pickaway-co, and Charles Gerhardt, attorney.

The junior band under the direction of C. F. Zaenglein played several selections in the business district before the hour of the program at the tea room.

His liberalism manifested itself even as a supreme court justice in New York. He is credited with having issued as a judge the first injunction in the country in favor of a labor union.

He wrote New York state's workmen's compensation law, which protects workers and their dependents from loss through industrial accidents.

"Employers and the magnates of industry used to cry, 'It can't be done. Your bill will ruin us,'" Senator Wagner remarked in recounting oldtime battles, adding:

"And they still make that cry. But it has been done and reforms enacted into law for the benefit of the worker have been a blessing. Those who scoffed later praised."

His Personal Taste

The conversation turned to personal matters. Wiener Schnitzel is a favorite food of the senator. He prefers beer to champagne. Bob Wagner is a stylish but not flashy dresser. He appears in the senate in symphonies of blue, gray or brown—a short, thick-set and big-chinned legislator, who no longer resorts to flights of oratory but pounds home statistics, facts in a well-modulated voice.

A widower, his interest is wrapped in his son, a student at Yale law school. He works long hours, frequently journeys to and from New York by airplane. Vacations he passes abroad, where he gathers information for social welfare measures he pushes in the senate, such as the old-age pension and unemployment insurance bill.

Senator Wagner piloted through the senate the National Industrial Recovery act, which the United States supreme court held unconstitutional. The senator naturally was grieved by that decision, but was satisfied with the thought that NRA in full bloom rescued the nation in the gloomy days of early 1933.

His "Pet" Bill

Always having several bills in the legislative hopper, Wagner's pet has been his so-called labor disputes bill, creating a federal board to settle capital-labor disputes, prescribing many "don'ts" for employers in their relations with employes, outlawing company-dominated unions and generally facilitating unionization of employes.

In addition, Senator Wagner recently has been bending his efforts toward passage of a bill for a gigantic federal housing program to clear away slums and give the underprivileged opportunity to live in sanitary, sunny quarters.

7 TALKS MADE IN FHA DEDICATION

A small but interested group attended the Better Housing exercises conducted at the "Cassabelle Tea Room" Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock when the tea room built under the Federal Housing plan by Mrs. Luella Plummer was officially opened.

Mack Parrett, chairman of the program, introduced the following speakers who gave short but interesting talks, M. E. Corotis, assistant director of the Southern Ohio district of the Federal Housing administration; W. B. Cady, mayor; Mrs. Clark Will, president of the Child Conservation league; K. J. Herrmann, president of the Chamber of Commerce; T. O. Gilliland, chairman of the Federal Housing Administration of Pickaway-co, and Charles Gerhardt, attorney.

The junior band under the direction of C. F. Zaenglein played several selections in the business district before the hour of the program at the tea room.
